Hate to break it to ya, Tolkein wrote about the never-ending battle between evil and good, the tendency of good to become complacent, the inexorable rise of evil and the massive struggle required to regain good. This one might be the biggest yet, tho.

There have been some Antifa whose identities got out and cost them their jobs. I recall two who were fired from a law firm even, they weren't lawyers but they got canned as clients started taking their business elsewhere when they heard about the sort of people employed there (would you trust them know how dox-happy Antifa is?)

My manager is at least mildly biased, when our state was still in "lockdown" he flat out said he and his family were visiting the nearby open states on the weekends where you could still dine indoors and when we've gone on vacation even though corporate policy was that you were supposed to self-isolate if you visited certain states, with him it's been "don't ask don't tell". You can tell that a lot of this stuff he's only doing because he's in a hard place and doesn't believe it himself.

My friend and I was just walking down the aisle way. We didn't care about the election at the time.

An much older coworker comes huffing and puffing about how Trump is gonna "fuck up my husband's Medicare!" She was rambling for a few minutes before scurrying off.

My friend just looked at me and said "maybe Trump is the change we need if people are that passionate about stuff now."

My friend and I are now Trump supporters, but she's more or less accepted the election as it standstills 😞

And now people are blinkered while the entire country is stolen from them by globalists.

My work (at the time), after rumors had been circulating for months about upcoming layoffs, etc, on Nov 9/the day after, announced all stores would be hiring more people, all employees were getting a substantial raise (average was about 25% increase), along with a substantially better bonus structure. Basically, they were anticipating and planning for a Hillary win and the negative economic effects on the company, and got a pleasant surprise w/ Trump that led to a massive increase that benefitted all employees. Since then (new company now, but that was also b/c of Trump, improving the labor market), I'm now making even more. I basically went from about $11/hr the day before the '16 election, to now making roughly triple that. Not to mention all my portfolios just going nuts since then (even with the covid dip [then rebound])
